The Court finds that the court has reviewed the approximately one hour video interview of the minor child provided by the Respondent. The Court further finds that the Court has been doing Family Law for over 20 years and has never seen a video that was so damaging for such a long period of time. It appeared to be an interrogation. The court further finds that during the video that Addison was very uncomfortable.
The court further finds that the court could see in the video that Addison was struggling and was often times hitting herself in the head trying to remember, and the court perceived that Addison was under a lot of stress and anxiety of being in that moment.
The court further finds that the Court could see in Addison's eyes that when her father was happy, she was happy.

And the Court interpreted that Addison was feeling for Mr. Lohman's pain, which is still evident today, and in some way to fill the hole that he currently has after the breakup of the relationship, and that is a lot to put on any nine-year-old girl.
The court further finds that it does not wish anyone to think that after watching the video that the court perceived that what Addison was saying in the video was the truth, and an example of what a bad parent the Petitioner is. And further that as the Petitioner was able to, herself, view the video in its entirety, and when she testified she did so in a very professional manner and very methodically, and the Petitioner did not in any way believe what Addison said was the truth. The Court further finds that it believes that the Respondent is in pain, and that Addison is in pain, and the court believes that counseling would have helped heal, because at this point in time, there is no healing.
